Alums, trustees practice law and order

One is a reality television fan who aspires to be a judge someday. On a mission trip this summer, she found time to sew curtains for the families and make clothes for the children in an African village.

Yet another is the child of missionaries who lived in the interior of the Ivory Coast for more than 14 years. His eclectic choice of music ranges from the classical tunes of Mozart to the Hip Hop beats of Fat Joe.

The third is an avid duck hunter who attended a different school each year from kindergarten through his first year of high school. His fraternity brother planted the seed that led to his current occupation.

Described respectively are Francis Marion University alums and attorneys Melissa Johnson Emery ('91), Robert E. Lee ('87) and Charles L. McLain III ('94) of McLain & Lee, LLC. Emery and Lee are also members of the FMU Board of Trustees.

Deemed leaders in their field, the three say they enjoy their jobs but also find pleasure in the little things in life. In fact, throughout their lives, they claim to have always taken the time to pick and smell the roses.

EMERY

Emery, a Dillon native, often reminisces on the good times she had at FMU. From passing notes in Founder's Hall to pulling pranks on her classmates, Emery had many memories to recall. One of her fondest is of FMU Political Science Professor Neil Thigpen who not only brought her many laughs but who demonstrated a care for students that can only be found at FMU, she said.

"The faculty and staff are willing to go that extra step for students," Emery said. "I don't think you'll find that level of care at other institutions."

The first in her family to complete college, Emery now serves on the board of her alma mater representing Congressional District One. A graduate of USC Law School, Emery has been practicing law for more than twelve years, after working for a year as the clerk for Judge James Lockemy in the state's Fourth Judicial Circuit.

First graduate of FMU transforms downtown Darlington

Mayor Watkins has the Midas touch

It was his desire to stop businesses from exiting the city of Darlington that made him run for the office of Mayor more than four years ago. It was his course of action in doing so that granted him victory in his re-election bid last November. Some say Darlington Mayor Anthony "Tony" Watkins ran for his second term of office unopposed because of his preservation of the downtown area.

Before making it to this point, Watkins seemed to rise to the top of whatever initiative he undertook. In 1971, he not only graduated at the top of his FMU class, but because he held the highest grade point average, he was the first person to receive a degree from the newly established Francis Marion College.

A Darlington council member for 14 years, Watkins opted to run for mayor in 2003. This FMU alum entered the homes of the city's residents right away in search of answers for bringing business back. The solution voiced by the people was the need for redevelopment of the city's downtown area.

Watkins agreed. He ran on a platform of restoration and once elected, he accomplished just that.

In bringing about renewal, the city partnered with Winston-Salem developers, the Landmark Group, who headed Emery lives in Myrtle Beach with her two children: Jennifer (18) and Grayson (5).

LEE

Lee said the small things that mean so much to him include his love for chocolate and Twizzlers. In nearly every place in the office, colleagues said Lee has candy stashed. His sweet tooth may have been a result of denied access to candy while he lived in Africa with his missionary parents between the ages of four and 18. For much of his time in Africa, Lee lived at a boarding school, as did many of the children of missionaries, he said. During that time, he learned to speak French fluently and several African dialects as well.

The Florence native later attended the Citadel and Nyack College before making his way to Francis Marion University. A graduate of USC Law School, Lee has practiced law 16 years.

The spark to become an attorney was first ignited in a 400 level business course taught by FMU Business Professor Donald Kelley, said Lee. Kelley and others just had a way of developing students' talents, he added.

"Francis Marion is ultimately the sum of its people," Lee said. "The relationships we've built with folks who are here - that is Francis Marion."

He has been on the FMU board for a decade where he served as chair for four years.

Lee resides in Florence and has two children: Margaret (8) and Robert Jr. (5).

McLAIN

A Charleston native, McLain has lived in a number of cities throughout the southeast region. As a builder, his stepfather moved where he could find work. With the frequent moves, McLain said he learned how to make friends quickly.

After high school, McLain said he worked for an awning company during rebuilding from the aftermath of Hurricane Hugo. He would often work more than 100 hours each week. McLain soon realized that if he didn't want to do this type of work all of his life, he needed an education. He enrolled and graduated from FMU with a degree in political science and later USC Law School.

McLain admits that initially, he never imagined he would return to Florence after law school. He also acknowledges that the relationships, especially those forged while attending FMU, are what drew him back. It was FMU associate provost and director of graduate programs Ken Kitts who made a lasting impression on his life, McLain said. Kitts, who is also a political science professor, and others at FMU made learning enjoyable, he said.

"That individualized attention and the care of the professors created a kind of family," McLain said. "I had a sense of belonging."

He and his wife Candy, who is also an FMU graduate, live in Marion with their two children, Hunter (5) and Caden (2).

THE FIRM

McLain and Lee started their own firm in May 2007 in Florence and later opened an office in North Myrtle Beach. The two needed someone to head that office and recently asked Emery if she would join their team.

The firm's focus is the client, McLain said. The trio tackles legal concerns regarding real estate, personal injury, family law and criminal law.

In March, the firm opened a third full service office in Marion.

The VIEW is published quarterly by the Office of Public and Community Affairs at Francis Marion University for alumni, friends and the university community.

successful rehabilitation projects in Mullins and Bennettsville. The city hired seasoned city planner Howard Garland to lead efforts. With a price tag of $4.9 million, this redevelopment project was aimed at preserving properties in Darlington's newly registered historic districts, and creating residential and retail spaces in the city's neglected downtown region.

Funded primarily through federal tax credits and grants, Phase One of the Darlington revitalization project included the rehabilitation and conversion of five buildings into 28 affordable apartments and four retail storefronts. The historical significance and renovation of these properties are as follows:

The Coleman Building: This three-story office building, erected in 1903, sits on the prominent downtown corner of Pearl Street and Main Street. In the 1990s, the Coleman Building was donated to Darlington's Chamber of Commerce, which sold the building to Landmark as part of Phase One preservation. For its cooperation, the Chamber can call the Coleman Building home with free rent for another 30 years.

Coleman Building

This building has been restored to its original design, with a column and breezeway. A business has already moved into a portion of the first floor, promoting "foot traffic" through the downtown area. Several apartments take up the second floor of the Coleman building, and the Chamber of Commerce resides downstairs.

Hill Building

The Hill Building: This pink two-story building on North Main Street was built in 1935 and originally served as an upstairs dentist office and downstairs pharmacy. Called "architecturally significant" for its detail, the Hill Building is home to Darlington retailers. The Hill Building serves as the signature building for the project.

The Coggeshall Grocery: This once-charming two-story grocery store at the North Main Street and Orange Street intersection was in great disrepair. Landmark entered the building to find nearly 60 percent damage due to termites and moisture. Coggeshall now hosts retail space downstairs and apartments upstairs.

Coggeshall Grocery

The Gibson House: A beautiful antebellum home from 1830s, the Gibson House is placed diagonally from the downtown square on Orange Street. The house was severely fire- and termite-damaged and likely facing demolition before the Palmetto Trust bought it from the Yarborough family in 2002. The Trust has sold the house, and the quaint carriage house behind it, to Landmark for conversion into affordable housing units. This transaction is an example of the Palmetto Trust's revolving fund, which allows the organization to buy properties in danger of being lost and resell them to interested preservationists.

Gibson House

"Our Pat": This property is unique to the Darlington Downtown restoration project because it is not in the historic district, nor on the National Register of Historic Places. But the property on Cashua Street is Darlington's former fire department, and the preservation partners found the building significant. "Our Pat" recently housed the Downtown Darlington Revitalization Association but now hosts retail space downstairs and apartments upstairs.

The Pat

Watkins recently received funding to renovate two other buildings as part of Phase Two of the project.

FMU Professor Jennifer Kunka contributes to reference guide

Jennifer Kunka, Francis Marion University assistant professor of English and director of the FMU Writing Center, is named a contributor to the recently released 7th edition of the Prentice Hall Reference Guide.

Authored by Muriel Harris of Purdue University, the Prentice Hall Reference Guide is a grammar and reference handbook used widely at universities and community colleges across the country. Kunka has contributed material about visual rhetoric, multimedia presentations, portfolios and writing for the web. She has also developed graphics and revised several sections related to rhetorical approaches to writing and documentation style.

To arrive at this point, Kunka endured a 10-month audition process and a one-year production schedule.

The reference guide is available from Paradoxal Press, Amazon.com and alibris.com. It can be purchased for $60.

Peterson

Peterson scholarship established

A scholarship has been established at Francis Marion University by the FMU African-American Faculty and Staff Coalition in honor of Chemistry Professor LeRoy "Pete" Peterson Jr.

The Dr. LeRoy "Pete" Peterson Endowed Scholarship was created to pay tribute to Peterson's distinguished career as a faculty member in chemistry, which began in the fall of 1990.

A native of Florence, Peterson is a professor of chemistry and has been cited for his extensive scholarly work, primarily in the field of chemistry, his service to the community and state and for service on numerous university committees. He earned a bachelor's degree at FMU in 1984 and a doctorate in chemistry from the University of South Carolina where he was an undergraduate laboratory-teaching assistant.

The scholarship will be permanently endowed for $25,000 with the first installment derived from proceeds generated through the FMU Foundation Chairman's Golf Classic in March 2008. The Coalition will award the first Peterson Scholarship in the fall of 2008 for no less than $1,000.

Recipients must be full-time FMU students who have a 2.5 grade point average or higher. Preference will be given to minority students who are U.S. citizens and who are in the greatest financial need.

Art's Alive

Francis Marion University will play host to the 31st annual Art's Alive Festival on Saturday, April 5.

The festival will take place from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., rain or shine, and it will be free and open to the public. The event is a celebration of the visual and performing arts for the whole family, with simultaneous performances at several different venues on campus.

FMU presents alumni awards

FMU recently presented its 2007-2008 alumni awards.

The Outstanding Alumnus is Ted Maness. He graduated in 1980 with a bachelor's degree in political science. Maness is a veteran of Republican politics and Capitol Hill. He worked on Republican campaigns in the 1980s and was director of legislative and political affairs for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce from 1987 to 1993. Maness served as chief of staff to then Representative and now Senator Jon Kyl (R-Ariz.) in his House and Senate offices from 1993 to 1997.

He was executive director of the National Republican Congressional Committee from 1997 to 1999, and vice president for industry relations at Fannie Mae from 1999 to 2001.

Maness is currently the chief of staff for Congressman George Radanovich (R-Calif.).

The Benjamin Wall Ingram III Young Alumna is Rachel Turner. The Florence native is a 2000 magna cum laude graduate with a B.S. degree in biology. She is a 2003 honors graduate of the Medical University of South Carolina with a master's degree in health administration. Employed by McLeod Health for four years, she is currently the associate administrator of public relations and marketing for McLeod Medical Center in Dillon, where she oversees public relations and marketing, cardiopulmonary services, cardiac rehab and physical therapy.

Turner is a member of Rehoboth Baptist Church, the South Carolina Chapter of the American College of Healthcare Executives, the Pee Dee area Alpha Delta Pi Alumnae Association and the Junior League of Florence. She currently serves on the FMU Alumni Association Board. She was married on March 1, 2008, to Will Gainey of Marion.

The Alumni Volunteer of the Year is Brent Tiller. He is a 2000

graduate with a degree in business administration.

In 2001, Tiller started Pinnacle Network Solutions, which serves the computer networking needs of local businesses and K-12 organizations. Currently, he serves as the operating partner and vice president. The Hartsville native has made hiring FMU students and graduates an essential part of his business model. Within the community, Tiller is an active member of the Florence Kiwanis Club. He is a member of Kappa Alpha Fraternity serving as a counselor to younger members and as the alumni chapter president for the Pee Dee. He is also a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Florence. In 2006, Tiller became a member of the FMU Alumni Association Board.

Tiller is married to the former DeAnn Weatherly of Dillon, also an FMU graduate. They have one daughter.

Sparrow family establishes three endowed chairs

The Nellie Cooke Sparrow Chair for a Writer in Residence, the Joseph Walker Coleman Sr. Chair in Elementary Education and the Henry Booker Sparrow Chair in Economics and Economics Forecasting have been established at Francis Marion University.

The chairs were established by long-time supporters of the university, John W. Sparrow and his family of Lake City. The Writer in Residence chair was established in memory of Sparrow's mother. The elementary education chair is a memorial to a friend of the Sparrow family who served as a superintendent in Florence School District Three and worked as a math teacher in Scranton. The chair in economics and economics forecasting was established in honor of Sparrow's father.

Each chair will be endowed for $100,000. The purpose of the chairs is to honor current or future faculty members for their academic excellence, integrity and professionalism in their field.

The writer in residence chair will be awarded to a faculty member in the Department of English, Modern Languages and Philosophy; the elementary education chair will be awarded to a faculty member in the School of Education; and the economics and economics forecasting chair will be awarded to a faculty member in the School of Business. The awarding of the chairs may also be used as a recruiting incentive for new faculty members in the respective departments. The chairs are expected to be awarded in August 2008.

The university recently received a substantial gift from the Sparrow family that will partially fund a new baseball stadium scheduled to be completed in 2010. The stadium will be named Henry Booker and Nellie Cooke Sparrow Baseball Stadium.

THE FMU Fund MAKING A DIFFERENCE

Becote appointed to Greer Endowed Chair

Linda D. Becote, associate professor and technical services librarian in the James A. Rogers Library at Francis Marion University, has been appointed by the president upon the nomination of the library faculty to the Betty Jean Windham Greer Chair in Library Science.

Becote has been with FMU since 1978, serving first as a staff member and then as a member of the faculty. She is now head of technical services where she and her staff are responsible for the acquisition of new books and electronic resources as well as cataloging the library's collection.

Grady Greer of Florence established the Betty Jean Windham Greer Chair in Library Science, in honor of his wife.

Endowed for $100,000, the purpose of the chair is to honor current or future members of the faculty of the James A. Rogers Library for academic excellence, integrity and professionalism in their field.

A native of Pamplico, Becote earned a bachelor's degree in business education at South Carolina State College and a master's degree in library and information science from the University of South Carolina.

Pee Dee Federal Savings Bank establishes scholarship

Pee Dee Federal Savings Bank in Marion has established a scholarship at FMU in honor of Raphael Wolpert.

The Dr. Raphael Wolpert Scholarship has been established to honor Wolpert who has served on the Pee Dee Federal Savings Bank board for nearly 37 years and as chairman since 1998.

The scholarship is designated for a Marion County student.

Pee Dee Federal Savings Bank established two other scholarships at FMU. The James C. Hooks Jr. Memorial Scholarship was established in February 2001 to honor Hooks, who served as chairman of the board. The Malcolm C. Woods Jr. Scholarship was established in May 1987 to honor Woods, former president and director of the bank.
